FILES SUIT TO STOP DENVER T.B. AID GROUP FROM SEEKING N.Y. FUNDS

Attorney General Nathaniel Goldstein filed a suit in New York State Supreme Court seeking to prohibit the Jewish Consumptives Relief Society of Denver from soliciting funds in New York State on the ground that patients were not getting proper care. Justice Samuel Dickstein signed an order directing the organization to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be granted pending trial of the action.

The Attorney General's action was based on an investigation made at the Denver institution by several former New York trustees and advisory council members, which purported to show that nursing service was inadequate, that patients had remained without treatment for long periods and that drugs had been withheld because of their alleged costliness, according to the New York Times.

Mitchell Salem Fisher, New York attorney for the organization, declared there was "no truth in any of the charges made by the Attorney General." He said the action was another development in an internal political fight in the organization that had been raging since 1947.

"For the Attorney General to make all these wild statements is indefensible," he added.

Assistant Attorney General Theodore R. Ostrow, in moving for a temporary injunction, filed an affidavit showing that the society collected $820,000 throughout the country in 1947, of which $327,000 was given in this state.

"These huge amounts have been lavished upon the defendant by sympathetic contributors in this state in the belief that the organization is operating a modern, completely equipped, properly staffed and medically superior type of institution for the care and treatment of victims of tuberculosis," he said.

Mr. Ostrow charged that the raising of funds through "misrepresentation as to its true treatment of tuberculosis victims" was "tantamount to a fraud upon the public," and added: "To allow such an organization to solicit money offends the public policy which of course recognizes the right only of bona fide accredited welfare agencies to conduct fund-raising appeals in this State."

The Assistant Attorney General said the attitude of the society had been indicated by "the disrespect and insolence" shown by its president, Dr. Lewis I. Miller, in dealing with the Attorney General's office.

Mr. Ostrow said that during most of its existence the institution had justified the faith of the public in its work. Some time ago, however, he continued, patients had formed a grievance committee to make known their dissatisfaction with the present hospital administration.

As a result, the organization's advisory council in New York formed an investigating committee, including Supreme Court Justice George J. Heldock; Irving Geist, Saul Rothfield and Albert Hochberg, all former trustees; Philip Diamond, a former vice-president; Harry Greenberg, a vice-president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, and Donald Flamm, a radio man.

An investigation made at Denver by members of the committee at their own expense, Mr. Ostrow said, showed that there was no clinic for the treatment of ailments other than tuberculosis, and that the institution had failed to keep step with modern therapeutic procedures.

Several affidavits from members of the investigating committee were filed with the court.

Mr. Goldstein said in a statement that "this action is not to be confused with any other institutions in Denver, such as the National Jewish Hospital of Denver or the National Jewish Home for Crippled Children."

An action was started by the Denver organization in Federal Court in New York last October against Messrs. Rothfeld, Diamond, Geist, Hochberg, Joseph Durst and Sidney Siegel, all trustees at the time, to compel them to turn over $48,000 to the society, the net proceeds of a benefit football game held at the Polo Grounds a year earlier.

In a counter-claim the defendants alleged mismanagement of the sanatorium and criticized the medical services.

Mr. Fisher said Judge Vincent L. Leibell had indicated his willingness to sign an order holding that the allegations in the counter-complaint were improperly filed in the Federal Court in New York and should be decided by Colorado courts. Meanwhile, he said, Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard had required the defendants to deposit $41,500 with the court, the amount now remaining from the football game proceeds.

Mr. Fisher said the opposition group in New York had been defeated at the national convention in Denver last January and that "it has succeeded in poisoning the minds of groups in other cities, with the result that funds are being withheld elsewhere."

Nazi Victims Anywhere To Be Paid, Due To Bold Action By New U.S. Official

The United States Military Governor has reversed itself and approved the general claims restitution law for indemnification of victims of Nazism as the result of an extraordinary and virtually one-man battle on behalf of the measure by John J. McCloy, High Commissioner-designate.

Convinced of the justness of the legislation, passed by the United State Zone German Council of States but shelved by the Military Governor through action initiated before his arrival, Mr. McCloy overruled the highest Military Governor authorities, overrode objections from the British Foreign Office, and apparently argued down some qualms expressed in Washington.

The law provides for distribution of about $60,000,000 deutsche marks by four United States Zone states to Jewish and non-Jewish sufferers under the Nazi regime. Its beneficiaries, through monthly pensions and lump sum payments, will include displaced persons in Germany, Nazi victims since emigrated to other countries as well as non-Jews who were imprisoned, physically injured or robbed by the Nazis.

A cablegram ordering approval of the restitutions law was sent to Berlin by Mr. McCloy from Washington and official notification was sent to the Germans on August 5. Proclamation of the measure by ministers-president in each of the four states is expected within the next two weeks since each of them previously had approved it, reports the New York Times.

Louis Greenstein, adviser on Jewish affairs to the United States Military Governor, hailed Mr. McCloy's action and said that he wished to express the deepest gratitude of thousands of Nazi victims to his sympathetic and unstinting aid on their behalf."

Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former United States Military Governor, had been in sympathy with the measure and when it first came up for his approval he sent it back to the Germans asking that displaced persons be included in its benefits. Subsequently when the German Council of States amended it, the proposed law underwent careful examination by Military Governor experts.

Less than two weeks before Maj. Gen. George P. Hays, deputy military governor, notified German officials that the United States Military Government felt that the law should be held up until the new Federal Government passed on it; United States Military Government officials working on property control said that they expected the law to be approved. Everyone interested in the case held that the law probably never would stand a chance with the new government.

When the matter was brought to Mr. McCloy's attention he called on his advisers for their opinions and at a conference in Berlin at least three high officials expressed disapproval. It was felt that the economic burden on Germans would be too great and that there was a possibility that the measure, intended only for the United States zone, might be considered unconstitutional.

Mr. McCloy asked for advice from the British Military Government, which, after referring it to the Foreign Office, reported that their superiors were opposed to it. State Department experts in Washington suggested that the law was open to amendment.

Advised of these opinions, Mr. Greenstein appealed to Mr. McCloy to stick by the original, declaring that the "law is weak enough as it is since Germans can never really indemnify Nazi victims because of the magnitude of crimes."

In addition to enthusiastic reaction in this case, Mr. McCloy has made a great impression on Jews in Germany because of an incident whose telling is gaining wide circulation. According to the story,

MUNICH RIOT WORST SINCE HITLER'S DEFEAT SAYS J.D.C. OFFICIAL

An ugly riot in which six Jews and three German policemen were injured seriously flared in the Friedensengel Platz, in Munich, Germany, on August 10. An official of the American Joint Distribution Committee declared that the incident was the "worst German anti-Jewish riot since Hitler's defeat" and contended that "dozens of Jews" had been injured and that "six were critically shot," says the New York Times.

The riot, which was caused by an anti-Semitic letter appearing in the newspaper Suedeutsche Zeitung, took place four days before Western Germans went to the polls to elect a parliament for a democratic German republic.

The letter, which was signed "Adolf Bleibtreu" (the translation of which is "Adolf Remains Faithful") told Jews to "go to America" and said the writer had been told by "several Americans" that it was held against Germans that "we did not gas all of them."

Jews protested the letter, gathering in the Mochlstrasse in the quarter occupied by Jewish displaced persons, and decided to march on the offices of the paper. A crowd of 200 to 300 began the demonstration but by the time the Friedensengel Platz was reached, the crowd had grown to nearly 750.

The police at first tried to turn the crowd away on foot but were overborne by weight of numbers. Then mounted police galloped into the crowd and were met by a volley of stones.

One or more policemen drew revolvers, firing into the crowd. Four Jews were hit, two of them being wounded seriously. Six more were beaten by police, according to officials of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee.

United States Military Government sources said that six Jews had been injured seriously and a "number of others" hurt in the street fighting where Jews used stones against policemens' clubs and pistols. Police said that twenty-six of their number were injured, three of them seriously.

Eventually two companies of United States military police were rushed to the scene and restored order. The German police were waved away and the Americans drew a cordon between the Jews and the German police while a Military Government officer and a Jewish chaplain of the United States Army strove to quiet the Jews.

Relations between Jewish displaced persons and Germans in Munich, the cradle of national socialism, have been bad almost since the start of the occupation. Politicians accuse the Jews of black marketing and city police recently raided black market operators. Americans in the city say that

Einstein Asks World School Of Social Studies

Dr. Albert Einstein urged the establishment of an international center of sociological studies "where the ways and means would be studied to establish a better understanding among nations." His comment was included in a report by Secretary General Trygve Lie on a proposal for the establishment of United Nations research laboratories to be submitted to a committee of experts in Paris.

Dr. Einstein, who gave his comment to a United Nations representative who visited him at the Institute of Advanced Studies at Princeton, N.J., was skeptical about the establishment of international scientific laboratories, as urged by France and a number of Latin-American and Middle Eastern countries. He declared that "freedom of work of the individual scholar is the main condition of scientific progress," and he said that in such fields as astronomy and geophysics central laboratories might be brought "under the influence of only one or two men with their own views, and too strict a discipline would do more harm than good to scientific work."

However, he observed that there was probably nothing more urgent and indispensable than the establishment of a sociological institute under "truly international and impartial auspices." He added:

"A method should be ironed out of teaching, for instance, history without creating the obsession of the past as is so often the case: The spell of nationalism may be thus broken and an actual improvement of relations between peoples would be the aim of such an institute.

"Social studies of this kind are to be pressed forward with utmost eagerness, for it is first in the minds of men that the conditions of a true international co-operation are to be sought; scientific and technical progress would mean little to mankind otherwise."

Dr. Einstein also remarked that a central international institute assigned to "study all forms of soil deterioration and find means of preventing or reclaiming it" would be very useful and would command general support. He suggested also that it would be useful to have international laboratories for the study and establishment of standards and systems of measures in various fields of science.

WOMEN RETURN HOME FOR SOCIAL SERVICE

The first Jewish children's center to be established in Greece will have as its director, Cecile Mizrahi, Athens-born social worker who has been studying at the University of Denver School of Social Work for the past two years on a scholarship provided by the National Council of Jewish Women. Miss Mizrahi and Miss Deborah Levy, of Portugal, another Council scholarship student, sailed on the S.S. Marine Tiger. Miss Levy, who has been studying medical social work at McGill University School of Social Work in Montreal, Quebec, hopes to make use of her training in raising the health standards among the Jewish population of Morocco.

The third Council scholarship student to return to Greece, Miss Mizrahi hopes that the center will serve not only the Jewish community but the entire population of Athens, where recreational facilities and welfare services are badly needed. Miss Levy, the only Portuguese student brought to America by the National Council of Jewish Women, is particularly interested in the program expansion now being undertaken by the Joint Distribution Committee in North Africa where a large Jewish population has had no social services. The first task there, Miss Levy feels, is to improve the health conditions in the homes and schools and to work toward the elimination of tuberculosis, trachoma and other diseases.

Of the 39 students from 15 countries who have been awarded welfare work scholarships by the National Council of Jewish Women, 15 have now returned overseas to make use of their American training in communities abroad.

THE SAPPHIRE ROD

A Legend

By Amy K. Blank

Once Moses flung his rod down before Pharaoh and it wriggled like a serpent; once he stretched it over the angry waves of the Red Sea and lo, the sea parted so that the children of Israel might dance across on dry land, picking red apples as they went. Then again the rod became too bold and struck water from a rock which brought quite a bit of trouble to Moses. All these are well known and comfortable stories and, if you omit the apples, they may all be read about in the Book. But there are still other legends told about the Sapphire Rod as strange, as beautiful and almost as old.

The first tale is of a dream. In dreams all things can happen and it appears that Moses in his dream forgot that he had received the rod by historical succession through Jethro, Joseph, Jacob and the others, even back to Adam—but that is another story. Moses dreamed that he took a marvellous journey which led him eventually to the very heart of Paradise where grew the Tree of Life, oldest of trees. Beneath the Tree he saw all the great scholars studying the Torah but Moses, in his haste, paid no heed to them. He stayed just a moment to listen to the four winds of heaven rustling in the Tree's foliage and then he snapped off a branch. Startled by his own temerity he hurried away and when he looked again upon the branch in his hand he saw that it was no living bough that he held but a rod of sapphire stone and that the name of God was graven upon it in letters of fire. This was his dream.

What Moses forgot when he dreamed was that he had really come to possession of the rod by quite other means.

It is told in the book of legends that one day, when Moses walked in Jethro's garden, he saw a strangely gleaming rod planted in the soil. He stooped to look. "What is this?" he asked of Jethro who stood at his side. Jethro tugged at his beard and stared thoughtfully at the rod.

"A strange, a very strange staff it is," he said. "I received it from a Hebrew, a man called Joseph, when I was in Egypt many a long year ago. I did not pay much attention to it but used it as I would any staff—to lean on when I walked abroad. One day as I stood in this place I, thoughtlessly and for no special reason, pushed the staff into the ground. Imagine my surprise when I found that it would not be pulled out again." Jethro glanced at Moses who was listening intently. "I called many young men from my house," he continued, "but not one could move the rod from its place, so I imagined that it had miraculously taken root. Immediately, I instituted a feast day and there I left the rod."

It seemed strange to Moses that the Hebrew, Joseph, had once owned the staff; a peculiar feeling of fellowship with it came over him. He leaned over and looked at the rod most carefully. He slipped his hand up and down the staff and felt a roughness with his fingertips and bent still closer to see what caused it. Then he noticed that words were engraved on the rod.

"Yes, there is some kind of writing on it," said Jethro, "but I cannot read it."

The letters on the rod looked very familiar to Moses. He read the words curled about the staff. First he read the names of the three Fathers of Israel—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Then he read the names of the six Mothers and the names of the twelve sons of Jacob, the tribes of Israel; and lastly, in letters that were cut deeply and inefaceably into the rod the holy name of God.

Moses' hand closed firmly about the rod. He did not stop to think, or to look at Jethro's astonished face, he quietly lifted the rod from the ground—and lo! it came as easily as though a child should pull a daisy from the grass. With the end of his robe he wiped the whole rod clean and behold! it gleamed like fire in his hand and the engraved letters glowed from the depths of the sapphire of which it was made.

Then Moses knew that the rod was his and that by the might of the Word upon it he would do great deeds. He felt the power of his ancestors growing as a tree within him; Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were in the strength of his arm and the might of his will.

Jethro had fallen on his face. "My lord shall have his servant's daughter to wife," said he.

And so it came to pass that Moses married the beautiful Zipporah and became master of the [illegible] staff which Moses kept ever with him, even when he walked on the hills of Midian watching the sheep. And in the great day when he approached the thorn bush which burned and yet was not consumed, though he had cast off his shoes he carried the staff as by right into the flame of the divine presence.

Did not the venerable Jethro say that the magic rod was given him by a Hebrew whose name was Joseph? A Hebrew who lived in the land of Egypt and whose name was

TURNING THE PAGES OF "CANADA UNLIMITED"

From hilltop to hilltop, Canada's early Indians sent smoke signals . . . a warning that foes were on the way. The French settlers despatched their own messages—tales of victory or defeat, sickness or cheer—by runners, who sped along the trails from village to village. By 1700, riders delivered their messages on horseback.

With dramatic speed, man's words and thoughts began to race along the singing wires of the telegraph, which came to Canada in 1846. Thirty years later, Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone . . . instant communication around the world was within reach.

Then in 1919 radio broadcasting made its entrance on the Canadian scene. Within a few years, conversations with ships at sea, with trains and even automobiles, were a reality.

Today, television is on our doorstep. Because our country is so vast, new means of communication is important—offering opportunities to every one of us. Yes, there's room to grow in Canada Unlimited.

Says Nazi Sentiment Rises

A recrudescence of Nationalist Socialist sentiment has occurred in Germany because of the pressure of post-war conditions and because of regulations imposed under occupation, Dr. Thomas Mann, the author, declared as he returned from three-months tour of Europe.

Dr. Mann had visited England, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, and Switzerland. In an interview with the New York Times he dealt particularly with his impressions of Germany.

"I did not speak to one honest German who was not deeply concerned about increasing nationalism in his country," he said. "Let us concede that military reaction in a defeated country always creates a certain amount of nationalism. But what we experience in Germany seems to go beyond the normal reaction.

"The Germans do not realize the cause of their actual condition. The great majority of the people complain:

"'Under Hitler we were much better off'."

Dr. Mann recommended that in dealing with the Germans it should be impressed upon them that they had lost the most destructive war in history. He also recommended that a further effort be made to convince them that this destructive war was brought on by Adolf Hitler.

Dr. Mann said that while abroad he had delivered lectures in London, at the University of Oxford, at Upsala and Lund in Sweden, in Copenhagen and in Zurich. His remarks summarizing his conclusions upon the state of mind of the German people were read from prepared notes.

Discussing his recommendations for dealing with the Germans he read:

"I have the feeling that in every school and post-office (in Germany) there should be posted: 'Why are your cities destroyed? Why is your country divided and occupied? Because you lost the most destructive war in history. Who led you into this war? Adolf Hitler and the National Socialist regime'."

SYNAGOGUE FOR BOYS, GIRLS OPENS

With eleven charter members officiating, the Bachurei Chemed Synagogue opened at Long Beach, Long Island, N.Y., realizing a $50,000 dream come true.

The organization, the only one of its kind in the United States, is composed of sixty-three boys and girls between the ages of 11 and 19. It was founded three years ago by Simon Solomon, a Hebrew teacher residing at 128 West Chester Street, Long Beach. The boys and girls conduct Sabbath services in the Orthodox manner.

As their members increased, after the beginning in 1946 in Mr. Solomon's home, the group hired the American Legion hall. The group was soon forced to seek larger quarters. Fifteen of the parents each contributed $1,000 to start a building fund and thus work began on their new house of worship.

The two-story building contains a balcony where girl members sit during services, according to Orthodox custom. Downstairs there are recreation rooms, a vestry room and a kitchen.

SPIRITUAL THERAPY FOR JEWISH VETERANS IN MENTAL HOSPITALS

By Rabbi Lee J. Levinger

I am a part-time Jewish chaplain serving Jewish veterans in a mental hospital. My work, like that of the many other rabbis doing the same kind of specialized job, is carried out under the auspices of the Division of Religious Activities of the National Jewish Welfare Board. The rabbi preaches and teaches Judaism, whether in a congregation, in an Army or Navy post, or in a hospital. The chief difference is that he serves a different group of people in a different background.

In a congregation the rabbi's activities are centered primarily around his synagogue, from which he branches out into the community. His first call is to conduct religious services and to supervise a religious school. His last is to advance the personal welfare of the individual members. But in the chaplaincy the situation is reversed, for personal welfare is the immediate daily need and formal religious services come second. Only the deep appeal of the High Holy Days and the Seder make these public occasions outstanding.

The chaplain in a Veterans' Hospital is, of course, a civil service employee. However, he must be endorsed by his own national religious body, which in the case of rabbis means the Division of Religious Activities of the National Jewish Welfare Board. The JWB also provides religious supplies, a minimum of funds for expenses, as well as annual chaplains' conferences and much advice and support.

The active volunteers in the religious as well as social program of the hospital come from the near-by communities. In my case, the Veterans Administration Hospital is located at Palo Alto, California, and the neighboring communities comprise a string of towns in the area called the Peninsula, running south from San Francisco. The chief Jewish organizations in this area have joined together in the Peninsula Coordinating Committee, one of whose activities is to serve the hospital. Through this body the man-power, and especially the woman-power, of the community is mobilized to take a full part in the hospital program in general, and to provide parties for the Jewish patients on all Jewish festivals and similar occasions.

The hospital itself is quite a large institution, with two full-time and very busy chaplains for the Protestant and Catholic patients. As about three per cent of the patients and two per cent of the personnel are Jewish, I am able to serve this body in about half of the normal working week, but with very intensive demands on my time while on duty.

The chaplain in the mental hospital faces a task which makes the greatest demands but which includes the utmost of satisfaction. He is a part of the medical team in a more specific way than in most other hospitals. Every branch of the mental hospital exists for one purpose, therapy. There are recreational therapy, occupational therapy, music therapy and bibliotherapy, all prescribed for various patients by the psychiatrists. Among these, the chaplain provides spiritual therapy. He is a part of the hospital staff, not only to teach religion, but to bring it to bear as part of the healing process.

I believe that our hospital is typical of the VA system in the high regard it gives to the work of the chaplains. Not only do we often consult the psychiatrists in regard to individual patients, but the medical men often request us to talk to certain patients with moral or religious problems and to aid in their solution. These problems of doubt, guilt or uncertainty are often central in the mind of a person with mental disorder, and so the chaplain may become an important ally of the psychiatrist. Recently our hospital arranged office hours for the chaplains to render this type of service.

This active participation in the healing situation dominates both aspects of the chaplain's daily activities, the religious services as well as the ward visiting, conferences with patients and their families, and all those varied tasks which come under the heading of personal welfare. The chaplain does not try to practice psychiatry, but he knows that religious comfort is good for people, especially for worried, nervous and brooding people. He knows also both by experience and by his many contacts with the theory of mental illness, that one of the important ways of helping these patients is simply to listen sympathetically to their stories.

Religious services are a special problem in a mental hospital. Many patients respond more directly to music and ritual than to the spoken word. Not being blessed myself with a singing voice, I make much use of recordings by the great cantors. I try also, with a certain measure of success, to lead the congregation in singing the more familiar hymns.

The congregation, of course, is not entirely homogeneous. As in every congregation, some people are actively interested, some frankly bored and inattentive, while the majority sit quietly and do not betray their inner thoughts. In talking to them, I find the clue to be simplicity, first of idea but especially of expression. Most of them understand what I say, though often they draw their own conclusions from it, and may ask me unexpected questions days or even weeks later. I remember one Christian patient who demanded a complete description of the tabernacle in the wilderness and one Jewish boy who objected to my using the word, "Judaism."

The ideal sermon seems to be an informal talk of about fifteen minutes, carrying one point with a sufficient number of examples, and is most appealing when it conveys comfort and consolation. Naturally, I discuss the Jewish holydays, the new state of Israel, and similar topics, but I find myself returning again and again to a sermon of comfort, based on one of the familiar Psalms, a sermon which is far more helpful here than the ringing appeals to social justice which we all prefer for the normal congregation. The patients are tragically in need of reassurance; they want to trust in God; they come to chapel for help in facing the acute problems of hospital life and of life in general.

The special situation in a mental hospital is even more evident in the variety of activities which concern personal welfare. This includes all the usual needs of the hospital patient, money, contacting the family back home, referrals to social service and Red Cross. But most of all it comprises friendship and understanding, a sympathetic ear to the very real doubts and worries, even though their causes may sometimes be imaginary. We must remember that the key to much of psychotherapy is simply in listening to and understanding the words of the patient.

This involves endless time, frequent repetitions, and searching a worrisome complication of motives. Sometimes the problem which seems solved on Monday comes back with all its original freshness on Wednesday, and must be gone over again. Sometimes the persecution complex of the Jew or the hesitancy for the future or sense of guilt for the past demands expression again and again. But the doctors are very busy men, with limited time for each interview, and the opportunity to unburden himself to the chaplain may be of tremendous value to the troubled and often troublesome patient.

The families of patients usually come to the chaplain, and share their worries with him. They want reassurance, of course, but at the same time they may betray their own neurotic strains, the family background which has been too hard for the patient to bear. We often feel that if the family situation could be solved, the cure of the patient would be far easier. But how can we expect people to take our own reasonable view when they are emotionally involved, when this illness may leave the family bereft of its only son or of its breadwinner? Sometimes it seems that the more devoted the family may be, the less patience they may have for the faults of the patient, for his illness or for his treatment.

This is the complicated and exacting service in which the chaplain finds himself in a mental hospital. It is at the same time the most stimulating and fascinating task because he is very definitely and consciously an integral part of the healing team of the hospital. At a time when the relations of medicine, psychology and religion are under examination, the chaplain in the mental hospital is working at this fascinating frontier of advancing thought. But even on the level of day to day service the chaplain finds his work ever new and ever interesting, a challenge to all his powers and a contribution to the mentally ill about him.

Samuel J. Borowsky, president of the Histadruth Ivrith (Hebrew Language and Culture Association) said, Mr. Borowsky is in Israel to survey methods for promoting a widespread interest in Hebrew language and cultural activities among American Jewry. Speaking on "Radio Israel," he called upon the citizens of the New Jewish State to help forge a cultural link with the Jews of America. He told his Israeli listeners that the establishment of the Jewish State has made American Jewry fertile ground for the development of the Hebrew language and culture.

Plans are under way at Tel Aviv for a World Hebrew Congress which will convene writers, scholars, and educators from some 50 countries in 1950, under the auspices of the World Hebrew Union.

Death leans over the driver's shoulder when the speedometer approaches the 80 mark. Scientific tests have shown that only relatively small gains in time are accomplished, especially in traffic, by the driver who pushes the gas pedal to the floor. Take your summer driving carefully.

A strong, well built house that will resist the wear and tear of wind and weather needs to have a solid, carefully laid foundation. The same is true of the human mind. When a child grows up in a healthy mental environment where he is loved and wanted, where he receives the basic needs of life and where discipline is reasonable and regular, his chances of good mental adjustment in later life are considerably improved.

Joseph! Of course this Joseph must have been Pharaoh's great overseer, Jacob's son. We are not told what Joseph did with the rod nor why he gave it to Jethro. But it is clear that he received it from his father, Jacob. We may, therefore, read backwards through the generations from the son Joseph to the father, Jacob, and then back another generation to Jacobs' mother, Rebekah.

Rebekah knew her son better than anyone else on earth. In his youth, when he was yet too young and full of dreams to know himself, she alone discerned in the undisciplined youth the man who was to be. Had she not known in her soul what stuff Jacob was made of she would hardly have dared to steal the sapphire rod from the covered chest in Isaac's tent on the day of the great deceit — the day when Jacob also brazenly stole the blessing from his brother.

A great hush hung over the tents and courts on that day; the hush of the given blessing. Jacob lay exhausted in his mother's tent. "You must go now," Rebekah urged him, "to Haran, to your uncle—now, before Esau returns." She looked down on him as he lay there, his lids half closed, the flower of the blessing hidden in his eyes. She knew that the time had come that he must learn to be a man.

"Get up and go," she commanded him. And so she sent her son empty-handed away. She allowed him no baggage and no comfort. "There are some people," she told him, "who must learn to leave their little gods behind." All the treasures of his youth she forbade him. But as he slipped away from her behind the tents she pushed the sapphire rod into his hands. "Keep it always," she said, and that was her farewell.

Thus it happened that Jacob, as he climbed wearily up slope after lonely slope toward the north, glanced at the writing on the staff. There were only five words engraved there then—the name of God, which Jacob could not read as yet. Abraham's and Sarah's, Isaac's and Rebekah's. He looked lovingly on the staff, the only relic of his home, and he mistook the glow he felt within the rod for the warmth of Rebekah's love for him. For as he reached the height which he later called Bethel, the staff glowed in his hand and its weight melted in the light of inward fires.

That night when Jacob laid his head upon the stone Eben Shetiyah, and the sun sank into the mists of the distant plain, and the hills closed around him in the darkness, Jacob drank the last dregs from the cup of loneliness. Never had he felt so alone and separate from man and God. He fell asleep with his hand resting on the sapphire rod and then he dreamed.

In Jacob's dream he saw the white ladder of mists upon which the angels ascended to heaven and descended and he heard the great promise, "The land upon which thou liest, to thee will I give it and to thy children." And when he awoke the loneliness had gone out from him because he had also heard Him, from whom the promise came, say: "I am the Lord, the God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac."

As he awoke Jacob's eye rested by chance upon the rod. It had lain quietly under the hand of the dreamer and knew the warmth of the sleeper's dream. There was a new word engraved below the name of Isaac. The rod had truly become his; it was the name "Jacob" that flickered in the sapphire by the light of the rising sun.

In the Timeless Land where timeless stories are born there are two stories told about the beginnings of the sapphire rod. The first goes all the way back to Adam our forefather (that same Adam who so loved the scent of herbs—but that is another story). It appears that God gave Adam the sapphire rod when they both still walked together in the quiet of the Garden. Adam used the rod, no doubt, as a cane to lean upon. He also used it when he played with the animals in Eden. As under a shepherd's staff the gentle creatures passed and were counted and as they went, Eve who lay watching in playful spirit, gave them names.

The second tale brings the sapphire rod even to its genesis and thus rounds out the cycle. This story tells that it was God who created the sapphire rod. It is not strange that the legend should have it that God created the rod, but strange is the manner in which He made it. It was not by fire in the caverns of the earth that the rod was forged. It was not so made at all. The old story tells that God sat in the quiet of the Sabbath eve and, as a child whittles on willow wood, in the cool restfulness of the first Sabbath God sat and fashioned the lovely rod out of a fragment taken from His sapphire throne. All the peace and all the understanding of that perfect Sabbath, God smoothed into the straight and shining rod.

NAZI VICTIMS

confirmed by Mr. McCloy, the high commissioner-designate was asked recently by a German leader "to forget the Dachau and Belsen concentration camps and think of us Germans in terms of the new Germany."

"I assure you," said Mr. McCloy, "that while I shall do everything in my power to help you get a fresh start and win a dignified and responsible place in the family of nations I shall not forget Dachau and Belsen."

The new law provides payment of 150 deutsche marks for every month imprisonment by the Nazis and similar payments for physical injuries and for looting of cash and other valuables by Nazis. It is expected that Nazi victims now in other countries will be paid in the currency of the nation in which they now reside, says the Times.

This is the second restitutions measure passed by the Germans. The first dealt with identifiable property such as real estate and capital goods in factories or stock holdings as well as cultural objects such as paintings and sculpture.

Although many people in Germany are "growing more assertive," there is "enough sense of freedom and decency in the German people on which there can be built a healthy and peaceful state," John J. McCloy, United States High Commissioner and Military Governor for Germany, declared in an address prepared for radio delivery.

His speech, over the Columbia Broadcasting System was his first public report to the American people since he became High Commissioner.

He conceded that former followers of Adolf Hitler hold 30 per cent of top government and industry jobs, but declared that he did not believe Nazism was being revived.

After quoting his predecessor, General Lucius D. Clay, as pointing out that the punitive stage of our occupation of Germany has about ended, Mr. McCloy reminded his listeners that a new stage is about to begin, in which the people of Western Germany will be able to set up a government of their own selection. He went on:

"As to the growth of nationalism, certainly many people in Germany are growing more assertive than they have been at any time since the close of the war. There is more to eat, at least in the Western zone, and, as the fear of starvation and the shock of a total military defeat have receded, people are beginning to assert themselves more than they were disposed to when they were hopeless, hungry and absorbed only in finding a living among the rubble.

"In spite of their defeat, the German people remain patriotic and the great majority of them feel imposed upon when they are blamed for what they consider to be the faults of others, whose policies they are now prepared to disclaim.

"I do not believe Nazism as such is being revived. I do not believe that new leaders today would get far if they really attempted to resurrect Nazism or reglorify Hitler. All that is too closely associated with defeat and disgraceful acts.

"There is another sign and a much more hopeful one. There is now, in Western Germany at least, a determined and strong group who are truly devoted to the concept of a peaceful, non-aggressive Germany. There is a strong core of freedom-seeking people among the general population and they have earnestly cooperated in the efforts made to democratize the country. They are to be found among the liberals, among labor, as well as among what the Communists love to call the 'bourgeoisie.'

"All these would set their forces hard against the revival of any purely militaristic or Nazi cult. I would guess that they would not be easily overwhelmed by the old forces of militarism and Nazism.

"Yet it is a fact that today, roughly speaking, about 30 per cent of the more important positions in government and industry are occupied by men who were formerly Nazi followers. This varies with localities and my figures are very inexact.

"Generally speaking, these men are not former activists although, here and there, they crop up too. The group I speak of is made up of followers, collaborators, people who were definitely non-resisters to the Nazi regime.

"But in judging them, bear in mind that there was relatively few who did resist; bear in mind the old German concept of authority and blind obedience to all officials and to the state and the heavy penalties meted out for resistance. And bear also in mind that many who did resist are now dead. Out of the 45,000,000 in the Western Zone, there is no doubt that far more than 30 per cent went along, so to speak, with Nazi domination."

He pointed out that "by our own rules," German courts after clearing out all Nazis are trying the less "virulent" ones and after either granting them acquittal, or fining them, or imposing some other sort of punishment, are permitting the defendants to be restored to civil activity.

Mr. McCloy expressed the conviction that many right-minded Germans "still do not fully realize the mistrust which still pervades the world regarding their country."

Turning to the subject of German economic recovery, he said:

"What I have seen of Germany in my first weeks of office contrasts vividly with what I saw in 1944 and 1945, when I was last there. Trade is moving, chimneys are smoking and generally there is less shabbiness, less dirt and less despair about. The rather phenomenal growth of Germany's trade and production in the last year is something for which we should be deeply thankful.

"There is no menace in recovery. There would be more than a menace if none occurred. But the recovery, phenomenal as it is, has left some severe problems in its wake — lack of capital funds for investment, unemployment, high prices. All these exist in spite of the upward production curves on the charts."

Mr. McCloy contends there was "not much reason to fear that the revival of the present Western German economy" would lead to a new German aggression."

He declared the United States would continue to maintain its forces and a strong staff in Berlin. He said also that the airlift had diminished due to the size of the stockpile of food and other supplies that had been built up.

The High Commissioner added: "Of course, the Army will be maintained in Germany, even though the form of administration is changed from military government to civilian rule. The armed forces are distributed in Western Germany as they have been heretofore, and they will be maintained at their present high state of efficiency and alertness."

Mr. McCloy said that the distribution and assimilation of perhaps as many as from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 people expelled from "Eastern areas" (meaning Russian-occupied territory) is a problem that at the moment seems almost to be insoluble.

MUNICH RIOT

during this raid the police confined their activity to arresting Jewish dealers although no action was taken against Germans who patronize the black market.

The United States Military Government does not intend to take any action against Seudeutsche Zeitung, it was learned from authoritative quarters. It is held that since the newspaper printed "three pro-Jewish letters" at the same time as one anti-Semitic letter the newspaper cannot be accused of anti-Semitism.

These sources acknowledged that it was "sloppy journalism" not to have investigated an obvious alias used by the writer of the letter, who also gave a fake address.

Reports on the riot are being sent to both John J. McCloy, United States High Commissioner-designate and to Washington and a "complete investigation" is underway.

The United States Military Government "deplored" the riots, Murray D. Wagoner, Bavarian land (state) director for the office of military government, declared in a statement. He said that since all the facts had not yet been received by his office "we cannot assess the blame in this matter."

Publisher Emil Goldschagg conceded later that the offending letter was signed with a fictitious name, but said, "since the contents of the letter seemed to be interesting as showing an anti-Semitic trend in Germany, we published it along with several pro-Jewish letters."

The paper also issued a statement saying that such incidents would not help German-Jewish relations. A special statement issued by the paper after the riot rejected the Jewish protest on the ground that the paper had a right to publish letters without identifying itself with the reader's stand.

FILES SUIT

He contended that the fight centered on Dr. Miller, and that if Dr. Miller would resign, "the institution would be 100 per cent with this group." He said Dr. Miller had served the institution without compensation for more than twenty years as a consultant and surgeon.

As part of the Federal Court suit, Mr. Fisher filed a letter from Gov. Leo Knous of Colorado, dated December 22, 1948, in which the Governor termed the hospital "an outstanding institution of healing and medical research."

A letter from the Colorado Health Department called the institution "a modern, well-equipped efficiently-managed institution with facilities and techniques conforming with the latest modern methods for the care of the tuberculous patient."

New Names in the NORTH

THERE'S new activity in Ontario's bushland north of Lake Superior. Marathon and Red Rock, Terrace and Heron Bay: they all tell the same story. New towns have arisen, old ones expanded. Only five years ago on the site of Marathon, for example, there was nothing but bush; today a new community beside a new pulp mill is contributing millions to Canada's export trade.

Such spectacular developments in the north are matched by continuing industrial expansion in the older established communities. Throughout Canada today ever-widening avenues of opportunity await the enterprise of young Canadians.

With newsprint production 50% above pre-war levels, Canada today has an output five times that of any other country, and accounts for three out of every five newspaper pages in the world.

"Canada is a land of opportunity . . . There is a field for almost anything one can think of, and anyone with a willingness for hard work has a good chance to achieve success", says Donald J. Smith, President of Hornet Industries Limited, Guelph, Ontario.

Hornet Industries Limited, which was founded in 1945, has in this short time achieved remarkable success in the manufacture of chain saws and combustion engines. More than half the production of the plant reaches markets outside Canada. From a staff of only a half dozen men in 1945, Hornet Industries Limited has expanded to three plants in Guelph, employing 296 workers.
